He was later presented with the loose items that had been collected by the fingerprint team prior to his arrival in Room 312, and he noted these items on his inventory list. The two newspapers were among those loose items, however, they were inadvertently omitted from the list. It has been determined that no other items were omitted. The search concluded at approximately 3:45 a.m., March 31, 1981, and all items seized were returned to the custody of the FBIHQ Laboratory Division.

The newspapers have been in his custody at the IPI Laboratory since they were seized and, as of today, April 8, 1981, are still in his custody. Neither SA proposed than to describe it as a purely unintentional oversight.

PINGERPRINT (LATENT FINGERPRINT EXAMINATIONS)

The following fingerprint results appear in Latent case number B-97819.

No latent prints of value are present or were developed on the one .22 revolver bearing serial number L731332 (K1) or the six cartridge cases (Q1 through Q6) which were recovered in the revolver.

TECHNICAL ANALYSIS (FIREARMS IDENTIFICATION EXAMINATIONS)

The following laboratory results appear in the combine laboratory report bearing laboratory numbers 10330048, 10330049, 10330050, 10330051, 10330052, 10330053, 10330054, 10330055, 10330056, 10331012, 10331055, 10331092, 10331114, 10401026, 10401028, 10402003, 10403041, and 10413016.

The six cartridge cases removed from the .22 Long Rifle Caliber RG Industries Revolver, Model RG14, Serial Number L731332, were identified as having been fired from that weapon.

The bullet removed from President Ronald Reagan, the bullet from Timothy McCarthy, and the bullet removed from Officer Delahanty, were all identified as having been fired from the above described revolver, bearing Serial Number L731332.

Bullet fragments and metal fragments recovered from James Brady, are too mutilated to determine caliber, manufacture, and general rifling characteristics or from which weapon the fragments might have been fired from.

The bullet fragments which were found in James Brady, fragments from the right rear window of the Presidential Limousine, and fragments from the window of the Universal Building, although not identifiable, were consistant with a devastator type round.

(b)(7)(c)

It was determined that the .32 caliber S&W cartridge case recovered at the Washington Hilton, was not fired from the weapon, a .32 Long Caliber S&W Revolver, Serial Number 4014, recovered from

(GUNPOWDER AND PRIMER RESIDUE EXAMINATION)

The clothing from all four victims at the Washington Hilton, were examined microscopically and processed chemically for the presence of gunpowder residue but none were found. The absence of such residue precludes the possibility of any muzzle-to-garment distance determinations.

Hinckley's clothing was also examined for gunpowder residue, but none were found.

swabs from hands of Hinckley were analyzed by neutron activation analysis. No significant amounts of antimony and barium were detected.

The absence of gunshot residue particles and significant amounts of antimony and barium does not preclude the possibility that a person could have discharged a firearm.

(PAINT AND TRAJECTORY EXAMINATIONS)

It was concluded by trajectory tests and microscopic, microchemical and instrumental analysis, that the bullet which struck and was removed from President Reagan, first deflected off of the right rear quarter panel of the Presidential Limousine. The bullet was found to exhibit paint layers and composition which were identical to that of the Presidential Limousine.

(AMMUNITION COMPONENT EXAMINATIONS)

A small metal cylinder was removed from the bullet removed from President Ronald Reagan, Timothy McCarthy, and Officer Delahanty. These three cylinders have characteristics similar to metal cylinders loaded into .22 caliber exploding bullets sold under the trade name "Devastator." The small metal cylinders in the bullets contained approximately 28 milligrams of lead azide. The lead azide is a primary explosive, used in detonators and primers in the commercial explosives industry.

Specimen Qll is a .22 caliber copper-plated lead bullet fragment which is too mutilated to determine its manufacturer or the general rifling characteristics of the weapon from which it was fired. Further, specimen Qll bears no microscopic marks of value for identification purposes.

Specimens Q12 and Q14 are metal fragments which have no remaining bullet characteristics and bear no microscopic marks of value for identification purposes.

Specimen Q13 is a copper-plated lead bullet fragment which is too mutilated to determine its caliber, manufacturer or the general rifling characteristics of the weapon from which it was fired. This fragment bears no microscopic marks of value.

The fragments contained in specimens Q29 through Q35 were examined and two copper-plated lead bullet fragments were noted. These bullet fragments are too mutilated to accurately determine their caliber(s), manufacturer(s) or the rifling characteristics of the weapon(s) which fired them. Further, these two bullet fragments bear no microscopic marks of value for identification purposes.

Specimens Q76 and Q77 are .22 Long Rifle caliber cartridges of Remington-Peters manufacture. Specimens Q78 through Q112 are .22 Long Rifle caliber cartridges of Winchester-Western manufacture. The bullet portions of these cartridges differ in physical characteristics from the bullets and bullet fragments recovered from the victims and from the scene of the shootings. No microscopic marks of value for comparison purposes were found in any of the Q76 through Q112 cartridges.

Peters manufacture. Based on microscopic comparisons, it was determined that the Q113 cartridge case was not fired in the K12 revolver.

Specimens Q126 through Q128 are .22 Short caliber cartridges of Remington-Peters manufacture. The bullet portions of these cartridges differ in physical characteristics from the bullets and bullet fragments recovered from the victims and from the scene of the shootings. No microscopic marks of value for identification purposes were found in the Q126 through Q128 cartridges.

GUNPOWDER AND PRIMER RESIDUE EXAMINATIONS

The Q8 through Q10, Q15 through Q20 and Q22 through Q28 garments were examined microscopically and processed chemically for the presence of gunpowder residues, but none were found. The absence of such residues precludes the possibility of making any muzzle-to-garment distance determinations.

The Q38, Q43 and Q44 garments from HINCKLEY were examined microscopically and processed chemically for the presence of gunpowder residues, but none were found.

The Q118 suit coat was examined microscopically and processed chemically for the presence of gunpowder residues, but none were found. Adhesive dabbings taken from the right and left sleeves of the Q118 suit coat were examined by instrumental means for particles of gunshot residue. No particles of gunshot residue were detected on these dabbings. It is pointed out that minute lead particles were detected on these dabbings. In the experience of the FBI Laboratory, such lead particles are not unique to gunshot residue and, therefore, cannot be identified as such.

Adhesive dabs taken from the cuff area of the right and left sleeves of the Q38 jacket were examined by scanning electron microscopy and x-ray analysis for particles of gunshot residue. No gunshot residue particles were detected on these dabs.

analysis for the elements antimony and barium which are components of sost primer mixtures and can be deposited on the back of the thumb, forefinger and connecting web area of the hand when a firearm is discharged. No significant amounts of antimony and barium were detected on specimens Q39 and Q40 from the back of the right and left hand of HINCKLEY.

Specimens Q41 and Q42 from the palms of HINCKLEY were likewise analyzed for antimony and barium. No significant amounts of antimony and barium were detected on specimens Q41 and Q42.

The absence of gunshot residue particles and significant amounts of antimony and barium does not preclude the possibility that a person could have discharged a firearm. If gunshot residues were deposited, such residues could have been removed by wiping, washing or other activity prior to the time the garment was sampled or the hands were swabbed.

An analysis of residue from the primer area of the Q1 through Q6 cartridge cases revealed barium but no antimony. This is consistent with primer mixtures used in .22 caliber cartridges produced by Cascade Cartridge Incorporated.

PAINT AND TRAJECTORY EXAMINATIONS

Specimen K6 was found to exhibit the following paint finish in the areas adjacent to the damaged portion:

1. Glossy black, nitrocelfulose modified acrylic lacquer

- 2. Thin dark gray nitrocellulose modified primer/surfacer
- 3. Thick medium to light gray lacquer primer
- 4. Thin red-brown nitrocellulose modified primer
- 5. Thick medium to light gray lacquer primer
- 6. Light (pale) green primer-type paint
- 7. Thick, coarse-textured, light pink body filler material
- 8. lietal substrate

A microscopic examination of the Q7 bullet revealed the presence of minute, crushed black paint deposits in several areas on the flattened side which exhibits no rifling characteristics. Some of these black paint deposits are crushed and intermixed with gray primerlike paints.

examinations disclosed that the black paint deposits on the Q7 bullet are like the black top layer as described in K6 above with respect to color, type and composition. Additionally, the crushed gray deposits on Q7 were found to be like a combination of layers two (2) and three (3) as set forth in the K6 layer structure with respect to types and composition.

Based on these paint comparisons, it is concluded that the Q7 Eullet either struck the painted surface represented by K6 or another painted surface that hears the exact same paints. This latter possibility is considered to be remote.

Trajectory tests conducted, using the Presidential limousine and the Kl revolver, confirmed that the bullet which struck President Reagan first deflected off of the right rear quarter panel of the Presidential limousine.

AUTUMITION COMPONENT EXAMINATIONS

A small metal cylinder was removed from each of the Q7, Q21 and Q138 bullets. These three cylinders have remaining observable characteristics similar to the metal cylinders loaded into .22 caliber exploding bullets sold under the trade name "Devastator."

Page 12 10330048 5 QY

An instrumental examination of the powder taken from the metal cylinders found in specimens Q7, Q21 and Q138 determined it to be lead azide, a primary explosive, used in detonators and primers in the commercial explosives industry. The small metal cylinders contained approximately 28 milligrams of lead azide and were sealed at one end with a blue hitrocellulose-based lacquer.

Lead carbonate hydroxide and elemental lead, two known byproducts from the detonation of lead azide, were found around the crater in specimen Oll7. It therefore was determined that the crater in specimen Ull7 was caused by the impact of a lead azide-containing bullet.

No residues were found on the Q14 fragment of aluminum from BRADY that could be attributed to explosives or their byproducts. Further, no byproducts which could be attributed to explosives were found on the Q11 through Q13 fragments from BRADY.

Foreign material removed from the Q36 swab and Q37 swab taken from the window of the Universal Building North was identified as minute particles of lead. Due to the limitation of material available, it was not possible to further characterize these particles or to detect other significant components which might identify the source of the foreign material.

The Q7, Q21 and Q138 bullets are the same in all observable physical characteristics as those sold commercially in "Devastator" cartridges. These three bullets, as well as the Q1 through Q6 cartridge cases, could have originated from the ALSO SUBMITTED ammunition box (Laboratory Number 10331055 S QY RF).

The lead component of the Q7, Q21 and Q138 bullets; the Q11, Q12 and Q13 lead fragments; the Q29, Q30, Q31 and Q33 lead fragments and lead fragments from specimens Q34, Q35 and Q115 were analyzed for their elemental composition using neutron activation analysis.

The lead component of the Q7 and Q138 bullets and the Q33 lead fragment match in elemental composition.

The Q11, Q12 and Q13 lead fragments match in elemental composition. It is consistent that these lead fragments originated from a single bullet.

The Q29, Q30 and Q31 lead fragments and the lead fragments from specimens Q34 and Q35 match in elemental composition. It is consistent that these lead fragments originated from a single bullet.

The lead represented by the Q29, Q30 and Q31 fragments and the fragments from Q34 and Q35 and the lead represented by the Q11, Q12 and Q13 fragments match in elemental composition. They are generally similar in elemental composition to the lead component of the Q21 bullet.

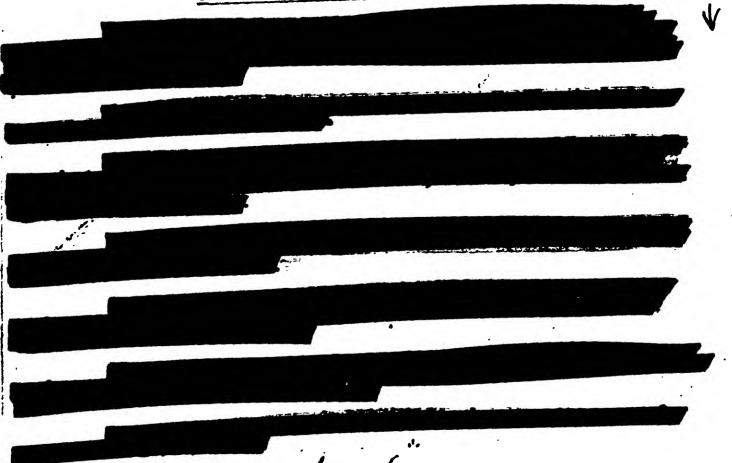

The lead fragments from specimen Q115 match in elemental composition. It is consistent that these lead fragments originated from a single bullet.

The four compositions of lead represented in the above specimens are consistent with lead compositions found in a single box of cormercially available cartridges.

No lead consistent with bullet lead was found in specimen Ol14.
